OUR MAIDEN SPEECH.

As strangers, we make a respectful bow to the citizens of Grenada, and the people of Yalobusha County; and in conformity with time-honored custom, we will proceed to fly a friendly banner in the shape of a prospectus. The Bowie Krife, although the title may appear somewhat unseemly, will make war on the victous practices of that deadly weapon. It will practices of that deadly weapon. It will practices of that deadly weapon. It will be found the inveterate foe of vice in all its aspects; and will, with equal ardor, inculcate all the virtues which adorn and add polish to the social system. As individuals, the understand will never compared to that deadly weapon. It will be found the Bowie Knife.

Our paper will endeavor to steer clear of the shoals and sand-bars upon which so many presses have been wrecked, and their partisan cargoes buried in the deep sea of political treachery and ingratitude. The editors desire that their contemplated journal shall not have a mere ephemeral existence—a life of that character which lives only on the food of party excitement, and then sickens and dies for the want of the proper aliment so indispensable to its maintenance. A paper should not gloat on the mere temporary glories of the world, or ally itself with a faction whose death-like struggles for power and place, urged forward by vaulting ambition, would speedily consign it to an untimely grave. We have no wish to perish prematurely, or receive the lachrymose tear of some political mountebank when our career shall approach to dissolution. No! the Bowie Knipe is ambitious of a higher and more elevated sphere of action; it will brandish its blade not to cut, slash, and tomahawk political reput-

C. S. SMITH. HOMAGE TO MARY. Sweet Maid! no power have I to fling
Along thy path song's brilliant rave,
Or sweep the harp, till every string
Grow vocal with the poet's praise;
But if a heart whose every tone

Of memory, hope and truth are thine; If to proclaim it all thine own And make its caves thy beauty's shrine

If that it never can forget

The blissful hour when first we met—
The hour to Hope now consecrate—
Fond memory's chosen alter seat:
If these be claims; Oh, let thine eye
Glance on the tribute here recorded;
Let it one thought of me supply,
And I shall be indeed rewarded!

Mary, I fain would here record The hopes which gathered o'er my heart,
When, find by thee, blest namory stored
Words, now of life the dearest part;
Words! dear because by thy lips breathed;
Treasured as bidding Hope live on;
And 'round the heart by young love wreather
To cheer it when all else had flown:

And now when stern misfortune's blas: Has to the winds some fair joys cast; And sorrow's Land all rudely scored Decay upon some tuneless chord : If, by the aid of memory

Thy form to my rapt soul is given; Joy shakes its shackled pinions free And soars to make thy smile its heaven!

Mary, forgive if I have dared To link young Hope with thy loyed name; Forgive, that Fame and thee have shared. My heart alike--their shrine the same!
For what were hope without thine eye
In which to ferm its blest retreat;

Or Fame, without the power to fly
And lay its trophies at thy feet!
What were the world, its honors proud, The homage of its senseless crowd, If that thy voice refused its power

To make me blest in triumph's hour: For dearer far one soul-breathed tone, Thy love and holy truth revealing, Than, if unshared by thee, a throne My proudest dreams of empire sealing.
